

RACE TRACK BOOMED FOR MOKENA

Two Million Dollar Deal
Involving Race Track, Polo
Grounds, Golf Links Planned

Mokena has been chosen as the site for a two million dollar proposition to consist of a race track, polo grounds, golf links, big club house and swimming pool. For several months rumors have been afloat in regards to this proposition.

George E. Gee, cashier of the Orland State Bank is vitally interested in this affair and on Wednesday night he and members of the Washington Jockey Club who are said to be back of the proposition, met with the Mokena village board and explained the promotion details to them and asked them for their permission to locate the enterprise in the vicinity and further asked the board to extend the village limits so as to take in the proposed race track.

BOARD FAVORS PROJECT

The board members declared they were ready to welcome the new project as it would mean a boom for Mokena.

MEMBERSHIPS $2,000.00

The promoters of the project are seeking to induce the business men of Mokena to take memberships in this proposition, the memberships sell for $2,000 apiece. It will take about $100,000 to swing the proposition. The board will give the promoters a definite reply to their proposition at the next board meeting.

Mokena business men are very conservative and while they admit that the proposed race track would be a big boom to the community, yet they feel that the promoters ought to finance the deal alone with out selling local memberships.

SEVERAL FARMS NEEDED

It is said that the Gee farm formerly the Bechstein farm southeast of Mokena is being considered as an ideal place for the proposed race track. This farm consists of 260 acres. In addition several other farms adjacent to the village are being looked upon as being needed in addition to the Gee farm to provide the needed ground space.

BIGGER THAN AURORA TRACK
Mr. Gee, cashier of the Orland State Bank who is vitally interested in this matter declares that the new race track will be far more elaborate than the Aurora race track.

PROMOTERS RELIABLE

Mr. Gee states that the proposition is a legitimate one and that the promoters are all wealthy Chicago business men of the best of repute.

WOULD BOOM PROPERTY

Should this deal become a reality it would mean a big increase in Mokena property values and the extension of the corporate limits would also mean a big increase in tax revenue as all property in the area to be annexed would pay village taxes.

LEAVE BLUE PRINTS

Blue prints describing the above mentioned deal fully, have been left with the Mokena village board.

Two Old Time
Tinley Citizens Die

Death claimed two well known residents of Tinley Park the past week. Mrs. Henry Mohr, aged 67 years, who has been ailing for some time, died Saturday. Funeral services were held Tuesday afternoon from the late home to the Zion Lutheran church and were very largely attended.

Mrs. Holstein, aged 75 years, was stricken with paralysis Sunday afternoon and passed away Monday afternoon. Funeral services were held Thursday afternoon from the Zion Lutheran church, Rev. A. Budenhagen officiating.

PREACHES FAREWELL SERMON

Rev. Flynn, pastor of the Tinley Park Methodist church for the past year, preached his farewell sermon last Sunday night. Mr. Fields of Oklahoma, who is a student at Garrett Biblical Institute, Evanston, is slated as his successor.

Drives Car While Drunk, Lands In
Ditch, Fined $100

Saturday night about nine o'clock a big Marmon Six car skidded off the concrete on the Lincoln Highway near the Pittner farm and landed in the ditch.

Wm. Probert and Frank Porter, both of Aurora, were arrested by deputy John Frisch, the former charged with driving the car while drunk, the latter with disorderly conduct. Both were taken to the Mokena police station and locked up until Sunday afternoon when they were given a hearing before police magistrate John F. Schultz.

Deputy Frisch stated that when he arrested Probert he was staggering in the mud and had a pint bottle of whiskey in his pocket.

Attorney Grady of Aurora, brother-in-law of Porter, represented both men and pleaded for leniency, saying they had never been in trouble before, that they were both hard workers. They are plasterers by trade, Probert is working at Naperville and earns $14 a day.

When questioned by attorney Grady, Probert said he was not drunk, altho he admitted having taken a few drinks before leaving Aurora. He said he and Porter were on their way to Gary, Ind. to see a friend of Porter's and that a car approaching from the opposite direction, failed to dim the bright lights which caused him to skid off the pavement.

After hearing all the evidence Magistrate Schultz fined Probert $100 and costs for driving a car while intoxicated and fined Porter $25 and costs on the disorderly conduct charge. As the youths only had $31 between them Attorney Grady gave them $3 more so they were able to pay Porter's fine and costs. An agreement was made between Probert and Magistrate John F. Schultz whereby Probert is to pay his fine and costs in two weekly installments out of his regular weekly wages.

As the car has a chattel mortgage on it, it could not be accepted as security.

Rev. Wm. Kreis of
St. John's Church
of Mokena Resigns

Residents of Mokena were much surprised the past week when the announcement was made that Rev. Wm. Kreis, pastor of the St. John Evangelical church for the past eight years, had tendered his resignation to the church council, said resignation to become effective on December 24, 1925.

Rev. Mr. Kreis came to the St. John church from Donaldson, Iowa in 1917. In 1920 he started a movement for a new church and after a very active campaign the new edifice was erected in 1922 and dedicated in April 1923. The new edifice which is the most imposing of its kind for many miles about, was built at a cost of about $65,000.00.

Rev. Mr. Kreis has accepted a call to serve two Evangelical congregations, one at Harvey and one at Dolton, Ill.

A special meeting of the members of St. John's was held Wednesday night of this week to vote on the pastor's resignation and to make arrangements for securing another pastor to fill vacancy.

Howard Cooper of Orland Weds So.
Holland Girl

A very pretty wedding took place last Thursday, September 24, at 6 P. M. in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Parberg, in South Holland, Illinois, when their daughter was united in marriage with Howard Cooper, son of Mr. John Cooper of Orland.

Promptly at the appointed hour the bride on the arm of her father descended the stairs from the second floor and took her place in the living room before the fireplace where she was met by the groom and bridal party. The pastor of the South Holland church performed the ceremony.

The room and fireplace was decorated and banked with ferns and fall flowers. The bride was becomingly gowned in white canton crepe trimmed with lace, and a long tulle veil caught up in pearls in cap shape. She carried a shower bouquet of brides roses.

The groom was attended by Pete Parberg, a brother of the bride.

Proceeding the entrance of the bridal party, Mrs. Clarence Beagley of Orland, a niece of the groom, sang "O, Promise Me."

Miss Malt played Lohengrin wedding march as the party entered the room. At the close of the ceremony, Mrs. Beagley and Miss Malt sang a duet "Whispering Hope."

A reception followed and dinner was served to 100 guests.

Mr. and Mrs. Cooper left on a motor trip to Rockford, Ill., to visit with the former's brother Albert Cooper and family. On their return they will go to homekeeping at the home of the groom's father on a farm in Orland.

Miss Parberg was a much beloved teacher in the first room in Mokena public school two years ago where she met her partner for life.

Oak Lawn Has 4th
Annual Snipe Hunt

The fourth annual Snipe Hunt given by the Walker Vehicle Company of Chicago was held in the Community Clubhouse of Oak Lawn last week, under the able management of George F. Samuelson of Oak Lawn, John T. Emery, prosecuting Attorney and Bert Franheim Attorney for the Defense.

After an exciting evening, the evidence were, two live chickens belonging to Chief of Police Eichler who furnished his own evidence.

Officers making the arrests were, Eichler and Morrow, who threw the prisoners into jail until they could reach Judge Aulwurm who held a midnight session. After the hearing the Judge held that the evidence was insusceptible and as being Corpus Delicti.

The Attorney for the Defense, Bert Franheim, claimed that the evidence had disappeared within the person of the prosecuting Attorney John T. Emery.

There were nine men taken into custody holding the bag and one claimed that he was only holding the lantern to find his way. We refrain from mentioning their names out of respect of their feelings after the third degree had been gone thru with.

The Snipe Hunt was held on Elmore's Oak Lawn Subdivision at 95th and 56th Avenue. After the Court Session, they all adjourned to the Community Clubhouse where supper was served by the Ladies Afternoon Club, to 150 couples, after which the rest of the evening was spent in dancing to the music of a good five piece jazz orchestra.

Among the notables who were holding box seats at the trial were: Gen. Supt. C. E. Smith, Sec'y of Short, Frank White, Foreman of the Electrical Dept., Mr. Emmans, Foreman of the Machine shop, A. A. Hannaman, manager of the Production Dept., all of the Walker Vehicle Company and Mr. J. F. Curtiss, resident manager of H. W.

Mokena Dairymen
Oppose Compulsory
Tuberculin Test

Following the issuance of a request by the Bowman Dairy Company that all patrons of their Mokena bottling plant be prepared not later than next April first, to deliver milk only from tuberculin tested herds under Federal and State supervision, and a demand by the local plant superintendent, that all patrons sign a contract which he presented, and which called for the immediate testing of all herds, a meeting of dairymen was held in Frankfort Hall on last Monday evening.

Mr. Clarence Cleveland who was called upon to address the milk producers, read a copy of the new Bowman contract and explained the substance of each paragraph. He also explained to those present the efforts of the Chicago City Health Commissioner, to bring about the tuberculin testing of all cattle from which Chicago's milk supply is drawn, in spite of many earnest pleas presented to him from time to time during the past two months, by bankers, farmers, and other organizations, who asked that he go along with the new state law covering the tuberculin test and the payment by the State for animals condemned as re-actors to such test.

Mr. Cleveland presented figures secured from Washington D. C., which indicated, that should the cattle owners of the inner belt Chicago district, comprising 7 Illinois counties, submit their herds to a tuberculin test, more than 60 per cent of their animals would be condemned on the first test. About 15 per cent of the balance would go on the second test, while the third fourth and fifth tests might clean out the entire herds in the large milk producing centers.

The speaker, stated that all and more than all of the $2,000,000.00 appropriated by the recent session of our Ill. Legislature for payment of re-acting cattle was already contracted, leaving only "hope" for the owners who may sign for the test in the next two years.

After considering the many angles to the very serious situation, a letter was written, addressed to the Bowman Dairy Co. and signed by the 130 farmers present.

This letter, a copy of which is printed here-with, explains the position of the Mokena district dairymen, and a few of their many reasons for seeming to oppose the tuberculin test.

Mokena, Illinois
September 28th 1925
Bowman Dairy Co.,
Chicago, Illinois.
Gentlemen:-

The superintendent of your Mokena plant is asking us to sign an agreement to submit our cattle to a tuberculin test, under penalty of being dropped from your list of patrons on next April first, should we refuse to sign such an agreement.

No assurance is offered to us in this agreement or otherwise, that we will receive a fair remuneration for condemned animals or that our milk, (should we have any for sale following a tuberculin test) could be sold at an advance over the present price.

It is said by authorities advancing the tuberculin test, that approximately 60 per cent of our present herds will be condemned as re-actors on an initial test with possibly 15 per cent further less on second and third tests.

Our local bankers have stated that they cannot see their way clear to loan us money for replacing cattle slaughtered under test, unless security covering other than dairy cattle property is offered.

We believe that our present dairy herds are free from disease in as

A. L. Brown Star
Salesman of Lots
In Calumet Region

Those who were fortunate enough to secure lots in Pater's Harbor View subdivision from A. L. Brown are wearing a broad smile this week. The Nickle Plate railroad began the construction of Calumet Harbor last week, to be completed in one year. The million dollar bridge built by the State over the little Calumet River a 134th street and Torrence Ave., will be open for traffic in 2 weeks and 22,000 autos a day will be turned over Torrence Avenue which is a state road. A big demonstration will be staged at the official opening. The Mayor of Chicago, U. S. Senators and Congressmen, citizens of South Chicago, Hegewich and Calumet City will be there.

Two new factories and a silk mill have announced their coming into the district. All lots on Pater's Harbor View will advance $200 or more in price on October 15th.

Mr. Brown sold 20 lots last week worth $18,200 in anticipation of this raise in price. Scores of new buildings are now planned to be built in the Spring on this subdivision and the lots should increase rapidly in value.

Mr. Brown has been instrumental in making an appointment with Chas. A. Burton, Sales manager of Pater & Co., to give an illustrated colored stereopticon lecture in Grange Hall in New Lenox next Tuesday evening Oct. 6 at 8 P. M.

Gas and Lantern-
Result Explosion

Frank Freeman, who is employed on the Chas. Vogt farm, was the victim of a peculiar accident one night last week.

He and a friend had been out riding in Freeman's car, and upon driving home Freeman noticed his car was out of gas. He ran the car in a garage on the farm and taking a can and lantern, went out in the yard and filled the can from a tank.

After filling the car, he set the can down near the lantern and an explosion followed. Both Mr. Freeman and his friend were far enough away so the burning gas did not hit them, but the burning fluid was creeping toward a straw stack and a large barn near by which was filled with cattle. Seeing the danger to these Mr. Freeman grabbed the blazing can and attempted to fling it further away, when some of the burning gas splattered on him and his trousers caught fire and before the blaze could be extinguished, his right limb was badly burned. Dr. A. Eckstadt was called and dressed the wound. Mr. Freeman is improving.

God Gets the Leavings

By REV. J. H. RALSTON, D. D.
Dean of the Correspondence School,
Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.

TEXT—And the residue thereof he maketh a god, even his graven image.—Isa. 44:17.

The prophet Isaiah in the portion of his great book where the text falls, gives remarkably interesting pictures of idolatry as it existed in Israel in his day. He gives a picture of the worker in metal forming a god, and of the carpenter making a god. The carpenter is even pictured as planting the seed from which the tree would grow to furnish the necessary material. When he is ready to make the god he cuts down his tree. It was probably on a chilly day and he used some of the tree to build a fire, at which he warms himself. With another portion of it he builds a fire upon which he cooks his food, and when all this is done, of the residue he makes a god. The idolater may have had a certain portion of the tree in mind out of which to form his graven image, but in any case, we have the significant expression, "Of the residue he makes a god."

The teaching here is that God gets what is left. What a commentary on the most of mankind! Some do not give God anything, for they are without God in this life and are without hope in the life to come, being utterly indifferent to such things. Others do not ignore God; He has some grip on them, but how do they respond? They give Him what is left after they have fully satisfied themselves.

This thought is illustrated by the fact that many men and women take all of life they can get to use for themselves, and when they are told they have very little left they will, so far as they are able, give some thought to the claims of God. All their life belongs to God, but they give Him the rag-end. When this part of life is reached they have little left to give to God, and what they have is impaired by age or illness.

We may apply the illustration to the use of time, as life is passing. God has given man six days out of seven largely for his own use, but He claims the seventh day for Himself. How much of that Sunday rest day does God get? Some may go to church and show their gratitude for life and health and all that life gives them. They think they give God all the seventh day, but really what a small portion of it is thus given? To go to the house of God once on that day is considered very creditable, but that is only a fraction of the day. An old directory for the observance of that day runs like this: "The Sabbath is to be sanctified by a holy resting all that day even from such world employments and recreations as are lawful on other days, spending the whole time in the public and private exercise of worshiping God, except so much as is to be taken up in the works of necessity and mercy."

Of material things we return little to God, using practically all on ourselves. God claims the first, but He gets the last. If out of one's income there is something left after all the necessities, comforts and luxuries of life are provided for, God may get it. He does not get the first one-tenth, and He rarely gets the last. And of our work or our influence, does He get the first and best? Business, friends, social life, personal pleasure get the full share from practically all, and God gets what little is left.

Is this right? Does God claim the last and the least? Does He not claim the first and the best? What does He say in connection with the passage from which the text is taken? "I am the first, and I am the last; and beside me there is no God."

Jesus did not abrogate the Old Testament injunction, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind." Note that it is not with part of the heart, and soul and strength and mind, but with all of these.

Has not God made us? Does He not provide for us? Does He not set before us something far beyond anything we have yet realized without money and without price? And He does all this for our highest good. Augustine said, "God has made us for Himself," and when man realizes that, he acts accordingly. Giving God the best, the first, we get the best out of life.

Lesson for October 4

PAUL IN ATHENS

LESSON TEXT—Acts 17:16-34.
GOLDEN TEXT—"For Him we live, and move, and have our being."—Acts 17:28.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Paul Tells the People About God.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Paul Preaches on Mars' Hill.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—God the Father of All Mankind.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—True and False Ideas of God.

I. The Idolatry of the Athenians (v. 16).

Athens was the intellectual metropolis of the world at that time, the home of the world's greatest eloquence and philosophy. Paul's spirit was stirred within him when he saw the city wholly given to idolatry.

II. Paul Disputing With the Athenians (vv. 17-21).

1. In the Synagogue (v. 17a).

True to his usual custom, he went into the Jewish synagogue and entered into earnest argument with the Jews and devout persons.

2. In the Market Place (vv. 17b-21).

From the Jews he turned to such as were found in the market place. Here he came into touch with the Epicurean and Stoic philosophers. The former were atheistic materialists. They denied the doctrine of creation, and gave themselves up to sensual indulgences since they rejected the idea of a future judgment. The latter were pantheists. When they heard the preaching of Paul they desired to know what new doctrine he preached, so they invited him to the Areopagus where he might speak to them of his new doctrine. They inquired as to what this "babbling" might say. Since the Athenians spent their whole time either in telling or hearing some new thing, they were willing to listen to Paul. The word, "babbling" means literally, "seed picker." They conceived Paul to be a globe-trotter who had gathered up seeds of truth here and there over the world, and that he was somewhat like themselves, interested in talking about that which he knew.

III. Paul's Address on Mars' Hill (vv. 22-31).

1. The Introduction (vv. 22-23).

He did not accuse them of superstition, but as in the Revised Version he introduces his discourse in a courteous and conciliatory manner, stating that he perceived that they were very religious. This he explains by saying that as he was viewing their city he beheld an altar with an inscription to the unknown god. This was his point of contact. He proceeded at once to connect it with the idea of the living God, implying that this altar had been erected to Him.

2. The Body of His Discourse (vv. 24-31).

(1) A Declaration Concerning God (v. 24-25).

(a. He created the material universe (v. 24). This was a direct blow at the philosophy of both the Epicureans and the Stoics.

(b. His Spirituality and Imminence (v. 24-25).

He is not worshiped with men's hands as though He needs anything, neither is He confined by any sort of a religious temple. Being essentially spiritual, He demands heart service, and being transcendent, above all, He is not confined to earthly temples.

(c. His Active Providence (v. 25).

He gives existence, bestows needed gifts, and as sovereign, directs all things.

(2) A Declaration Concerning Man (vv. 26-31).

(a. This was a blow at the foolish Athenian pride which supposed that they were superior to all other people. This proposition he proved from their own literature (v. 28).

(b. Nations have their place by the sovereign purpose of God (v. 26).

(c. Men Should Seek God (v. 27).

His goodness and grace in supplying all our needs, and ordering that even the affairs of the nations should move men to see and seek God.

(d. The Pressing Obligation to Repent (vv. 30-31).

This was his supreme message.

IV. Results of Paul's Preaching (vv. 32-34).

1. Some Mocked (v. 32).

This is even the case today. Men and women will mock the preacher who preaches a judgment to come.

2. Some Procrastinated (v. 32).

Many do not mock, but they hesitate to accept and act upon the urgency of the message.

3. Some Believed (v. 34).

Wherever the gospel is preached there are some who believe and are saved.

As Men Succeed

Men succeed in proportion to the fixity of their views and the invincibility of their purpose. If you can find out a man's quitting point, the place where he gives up, turns back, you can measure him pretty easily.—Marden.

POINTS ON KEEPING WELL

DANGERS OF CANNED FOOD

CANNING as a method of preserving human food, is only about half a century old, but it has developed to such an enormous extent and the use of canned goods is so common, that some kind of canned food is used by almost everyone. So anything bearing on the purity or healthfulness of canned goods is of almost universal interest.

Naturally in the billions of cans of food put up and offered for sale each year, there is a certain percentage of spoilage. In such cases, the contents of the can are generally unfit to eat and in some cases, such as botulism poisoning, may be extremely dangerous. What are the dangers to be apprehended in canned goods and how can they be recognized?

Strange to say, the methods for detecting spoiled canned goods have not been worked out by public health officers or pure food inspectors, as one would expect, but rather, so far at least, by dealers. Yet this is not surprising when we reflect that up to the present, most of us are a great deal more careful and anxious about our money than our health. So the examination of spoiled canned food has been developed by the canners themselves, to whom spoiled cans mean financial loss.

In a recent issue of the Journal of Infectious Disease appears a description of the method of the laboratory established and kept up by the National Canners' association, an organization of the canned food producers of the country. In this laboratory, all spoiled cans are carefully examined with a view to finding out the cause of spoiling and how to prevent it. This laboratory has examined over 600 samples of canned goods, sent in by canners who want to know why the cans had spoiled and what was responsible for the spoiling.

Flippers are cans with one end bulging. When the bulging end is pressed down it stays flat. This may be due to spoiling or leakage of air.

Springers are cans with one end bulging. When the bulging end is pressed down the other end bulges. This may be due to the pressure of hydrogen gas produced by fermentation, to imperfect closing of the can, to overfilling, or to denting and bending of the can.

Swells are cans with both ends bulging. They are caused by gas or by some infection of the contents.

In any case, if the contents look wrong, taste wrong or smell wrong either cook them or throw them away. Poisons which may develop in canned goods are too deadly to take any chances.

DIRT IN THE EYE

AN EMINENT philosopher once said that dirt was simply matter in the wrong place. If this is true, and I don't know any better definition, then certainly cinders, street dust, bits of coal, lime or stone, iron, steel or brass filings are dirt, when they get in the eye, for they are surely out of place there.

Every one has had a cinder in the eye. If the foreign body, whatever it is, is smooth, it may come out easily or the tears and the muscular effort of winking may work it down to the lower inner angle of the eye, where it is easily wiped out with a handkerchief.

But if it is hot, as cinders often are, or rough and jagged, it may burn or tear a hole in the conjunctiva, the white shining membrane that covers the eyeball. Embedded in this hole it may be so fixed that it will not come out or only after using a considerable amount of force which still further irritates the eye.

Taking a foreign body out of one's own eye is difficult, if not impossible. So a friend, a bystander or a fellow workman usually volunteers. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, the speck can be easily taken out on the point of a folded handkerchief, after the lid has been turned back and the eyeball exposed. But in the unusual case, where the object is sharp and sticks closely to the eyeball or where force is used so that the eyeball is torn or where the fingers or handkerchief of the operator are dirty and infection follows, an ulcer may develop on the eyeball which may cause serious trouble. Even if the infection does not spread to the entire eyeball, the healing ulcer may cause a scar to form which may seriously interfere with the sight of the eye.

Any foreign body in the eye should be removed at once. Wash your hands, stand behind the patient, who should look down, grasp the edge of the lid gently but firmly, draw the lid down and forward and then turn it back over a pencil of clean toothpick. Examine the eyeball and the everted lid by as strong a light as possible. If the foreign body is seen and is lying loose, wipe it off with the edge of a clean folded handkerchief or towel. Don't rub the eye; this may only embed the cinder deeper.

If the object is embedded in the conjunctiva, don't try to dig it out. You will only damage the eye more. That's a case for the doctor who knows what to do.

Slants on Life

A Penalty of Extra-Punctuality

SYLVIA had become a spinster in the world's most unfavorable significance. She was still modish in attire and in various other superficial details, but her efforts to approximate youth served only to emphasize her loss of it.

She was the legal custodian of a fortune at which many a masculine eye had been made, but her fastidiousness had led her to postpone matrimony hazardingly.

Too long, she admitted to herself, she had believed that two birds in the bush are worth more than one bird in hand. She had not fully realized the truth until she took account of her social allies. All her girl companions had disappeared. Middle-aged and settled women were her familiars. The vanity of still having men about her—old beaux and others not exactly old—had obscured for a time the real reason for their attentions. The only satisfaction left to her was the fact that she was nevertheless rich.

At last—and while her case seemed serious—Sylvia fell in love. She was naturally ardent, and circumstances led to her complete obsession. The man was Percy, a stock broker at present without a paying vocation, but still alert to the possibilities of chance. Sylvia had heard of him indefinitely at a period when he owned a yacht and race horses, and he did not tell her the times had forced him to part with his dearest possessions.

Percy had worked his enforced leisure to good purpose. His acquaintance gave him social opportunities that he cultivated with all the assiduity he would have given to business if business had not disappeared. He met Sylvia at a garden party where dancing of a stately sort was affected to show superiority over the craze of the vulgar. And he danced his way into her heart.

"Ah! A clever man! Who would have thought it?" somewhat obscurely remarked one of Sylvia's friends to whom Sylvia had confided her engagement to Percy. "You should see him in the less exclusive dances."

"You mean—the—the—"

"Yes. The more miscellaneous dances that so many persons indulge in at public places, where even more miscellaneous persons look on for a fee—dances like the Ta-tao and the Tete-a-tete and the—"

"But those must be exceedingly vulgar. And what funny names!" Sylvia, strangely, had never been in the White Light region except on her way to the opera.

"Vulgar? Is vulgarity confined to dancing these dances?"

"Excuse me—but do you sometimes dance these dances?"

"I haven't fully abandoned the habit."

"And where can I be taught?"

Sylvia's friend told her where she could be taught. For Sylvia, in her new happiness, felt actually skittish and was determined to joyously surprise Percy.

The ante-marital period was busy. Percy attended Sylvia as ardently as though she were a very girl. But she stole time to learn dances that thrilled her. Ah! And she would have Percy for a partner.

She was to meet Percy at a more or less noted resort at a given hour on an evening for which she prepared with great care and some trepidation. Percy professed wonder at the engagement, but had learned of her lessons. Sylvia was so intent upon the event that she traversed all the traditions of her sex's lack of punctuality by arriving half an hour ahead of the appointed time.

As she glanced through a doorway, she saw Percy dancing so intimately with a stunningly handsome woman that it made her heart stand still.

As they whirled past the door engrossed in each other, so near they almost touched her, Sylvia heard Percy say, "But you know I'm to marry her. Money, my dear."

Percy caught sight of the white countenance of Sylvia as she turned away. During a varied experience with the sex he never before had known a woman to be ahead of time. In a moment he was by her side. She had settled weakly upon a convenient divan, but there was no weakness in her face as she turned it away. Percy had negotiated many a difficult deal during his career, but the problem of his life now confronted him.

Did Percy marry Sylvia?

SICK WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Can Be Carried Comfortably Over The Critical Period by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

—Note Mrs. Headden's Case

Macon, Georgia.—"During the Change of Life I suffered with my whole right side and could not lie on my left side. I was in bed about two months and could not get up only as my son would lift me. After doctoring without relief a man who was rooming with us told my son that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cured his mother at the Change of Life, so I began taking your medicine. After taking it for two weeks I could get out of my bed by myself. I am now 53 years old and in better health and stronger than ever in my life. I have recommended the Vegetable Compound to many suffering women, young and old, and you may use my name anywhere as long as you please. I will be glad to answer any letters sent to me."

—Mrs. F. B. HEADDEN, 5 Holt Avenue, Macon, Georgia.

In a recent country-wide canvass of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound over 200,000 replies were received and 98 out of every 100 reported they had been benefited by its use. For sale by druggists everywhere.

"Nip" Unfledged Parrots

Travelers report only the most simple methods are employed in capturing parrots for sale in the forests of Brazil, the natives having learned wisdom and conservation of effort. They locate the nest of the parrot, visit it when the birds are only a few weeks old and deftly trim one wing to prevent the balance necessary for flight, the result being, when the birds are unable to fly, one wing being lighter than it really ought to be, and it is a simple task to capture them.—Ohio State Journal.

Mental Disease Statistics

That nearly 14 out of every 100 patients admitted to hospitals for mental diseases recover, and that more women are cured than men, is shown by an investigation of all hospitals for mental diseases in the United States which the federal census bureau has just completed. The recovery rate for insanity due to drugs was about 43 for every 100 cases, the highest recovery rate of any type of insanity. Next comes alcoholic insanity with 38 per cent of all cases curable. Women recover twice as often as men do from insanity due to physical injuries, but only 30 women recover from alcoholic insanity to 40 men. The most hopeless of all types of insanity is general paralysis or paresis, of which only five out of 1,000 recover.

Fewer Coal Miners Killed

Coal mining accidents in the United States during the first half of 1925 resulted in a loss of 1,098 lives, or 239 fewer than during the first six months of 1924 and the number of deaths a million tons of coal mined was 3.89, as compared with 4.73 last year, a reduction of about 18 per cent.

Trade among Friends

No matter what some folks say to the contrary, there certainly is a lot of sentiment in business. Friendship, for instance, makes more satisfactory sales than all the cleverness and argument in the world.

You like to trade at a certain store—not because its counters are arranged in a scientific way, but because the folks who serve you are always friendly and helpful.

Just that very thing—FRIENDLY SERVICE—is the power that draws people together into communities like this, where everybody can enjoy the many benefits of neighborly cooperation.

And FRIENDLY SERVICE is the sentimental reason why you find it very much to your advantage to trade with our advertisers—to buy where you feel at home, where your friends will see that you are well satisfied.

Who Buys Your Clothes?

WHEN you buy a new suit do you take your wife along to help you select it? The opinions of men on this subject vary greatly.

"I haven't bought a thing for myself since I was married," one man will say. "When I want shirts, collars, ties—in fact anything except suits and overcoat, my wife selects them by herself. For the others, we go together."

And here's the other extreme: "No, sir! My wife hasn't a word to say about what I wear. She can get what she wants for herself and the children, but nobody's going to tell me what I shall wear."

You probably couldn't change either man in his conviction, but here are the facts on woman as a purchaser of men's clothes: She is used to shopping, both for values and styles. It takes a persuasive salesperson to sell a woman something she doesn't want.

Men, on the other hand, dislike prolonging the shopping expedition and will take almost anything offered. They are not as keen for values nor as observant of details. The man who has plenty of money to spend does not like to tinker about prices, and the man who must watch the pennies is likely to pass up quality and workmanship in favor of low prices. A

Had Lost All Hope of Ever Being Well

Read story of the fight for health and final victory as told
by Mrs. James A.
Hall, Box 31, Norris City, Illinois.

"About twelve years ago my health failed. I could not eat anything without suffering. I had heartburn, sour stomach, palpitation of the heart, smothering spells, pains in my back and sides and a cough almost like consumption. Nothing helped me. I grew worse and was able to sit up only part of the time. I had lost all hope of ever being any better when someone gave me a Pe-ru-na book. The book described my case so truly that I began to take Pe-ru-na. After two and a half bottles I could eat without suffering and improved from then on. I took eight bottles and felt like a new person. That was fourteen years ago. So many diseases are due to catarrh that I think Pe-ru-na the greatest family medicine in the world."

For more than half a century Pe-ru-na has been doing just such work as this.

SINNERS IN HEAVEN

BY CLIVE ARDEN

COPYRIGHT BY THE BOBBE-HERALL COMPANY

"OH, HUGHIE!"

SYNOPSIS.—Living in the small English village of Darbury, old-fashioned and sedate place, Barbara Stockley, daughter of a widowed mother, is soon to celebrate her marriage to Hugh Rochdale, rich and well connected. Barbara is adventurous, and has planned, with an aunt, an airplane trip to Australia. Major Alan Croft, famous as an aviator, is to be the pilot. At her first meeting with Croft Barbara is attracted by his manner and conversation, different from the cut-and-dried conventions of her small town. They set out, Barbara, her aunt, Croft, and a mechanic. Word in a few days comes to Darbury that the plane is missing and its occupants believed lost. Croft and Barbara, after the wreck of the airplane in a furious storm, reach an apparently uninhabited island in the Pacific ocean. The other two members of the party had perished.

PART TWO—Continued.

"Let me do that. Shall I?" she asked.

"Don't you mind blood?"

"Of course not!" she answered indignantly.

He handed her the blood-stained wet handkerchief without a word, inclining his head toward her. In a few minutes he rose to his feet, all traces of blood washed away, his head bandaged adroitly with her own handkerchief twisted in his.

"I'm going up that hill, to view the land," he said, with abrupt decision, proceeding toward it as if oblivious of her presence.

"I'm coming too!" she exclaimed, hastening after him. "I'm not going to be left alone down here! There may be alligators and things!"

He gave an impatient smile. "Come along, then; I'll help you up."

"Oh, no, thanks! I can manage quite well," she replied rather coldly, nettled by his tone and manner.

He said no more, but began to climb the rugged rock-strewn hillside with the agility of a mountain goat.

Barbara struggled after him, slipping, bruising herself, panting for breath. The shock had left her weak and unsteady. She sank upon the ground, drawing hard sobbing breaths. Croft, without a backward glance, was disappearing among the larger boulders at the summit. Fearful of being left, she rose again and scrambled on. Her aching head throbbed wildly now; sudden dizziness caused everything to swim around her. . . .

Stumbling over a half-concealed rock, she fell prone upon the ground. . . .

There she lay, conscious of a terrible silence. No other sentient being seemed to move within a world so full of awful loneliness that it appalled her; it was almost tangible. A great wave of fear, grief, loss, homesickness, wild-almost childlike—longing for Hugh, swept her away. For the first time since the horror began, she found relief in tears. She lay there alone, sobbing weakly. . . .

From the top of the hill Croft scanned what was visible of the land along the north, east and west coasts. This was, he concluded, an island of volcanic origin, with the exceptionally high reef more or less surrounding it, sometimes at a considerable distance from, and sometimes fairly near, the shore. He surveyed the view critically, a purpose forming in his mind.

The gradient inland culminated in a short, fairly steep rise to a grove of cocoa palms, near which a clearing was visible, covered with little groups of something—possibly caves or rocks. Nowhere did there appear to be sign of human life.

It would be easy, he saw, to reach those possible caves by following the neck of high ground running inland from the top of his hill. Turning seaward, he shaded his eyes with his hands and scanned the horizon.

No indication of life was visible. No smoke, no mast, no sail.

He swept the small island with another keen critical glance. From his knowledge of the South Pacific—in which ocean, somewhere, this island must lie—he guessed it to be of little or no use for trade, either in copra or other exports, in spite of its patches of luxuriant verdure. Therefore, probably, it was never visited by the outside world! Unless there were habitations in the south, it was conceivably uninhabited—possibly unknown.

For some moments he stood motionless, facing these probabilities. Then, with a grim face, he turned in search of his companion.

Barbara, her head buried in her arms, did not hear his approach. It was with a start of surprise that she found herself suddenly lifted bodily, as if she were but a featherweight. Feeling again very small and ashamed, she would have struggled free, but his grip tightened.

"Keep still! It's a rough climb." He spoke abruptly, ever his way in moments of stress. The tears of weakness rose again in her eyes. She closed them, but too late to hide what she felt he would displease. She turned her face away into his wet shoulder; and he strode along in silence.

Stray rocks lay about the ridge; small shrubs, interspersed with ferns and club mosses, made progress difficult; but he never paused until they were among the tall trees of the palm grove. Then he set the girl upon her feet.

"Where are we going?" she asked.

"Listen!" he commanded, without answering her question.

From near at hand came the noise of rushing water. He turned farther inland, amid tall avenues of bamboo, toward the sound, Barbara closely following. Presently a pleased exclamation escaped his lips, and he halted.

From the high ground the river tumbled down, a sheer waterfall of dancing crystals splashing from great boulders high up among the forest trees to smaller ones on the lower level; thence hurrying and gurgling over little rocks, which encircled small pools of translucent green, into a clear, softly flowing stream some six feet deep. This after a time spread out and grew shallow, finally disappearing between rustling walls of bamboo canes toward the cove where it joined the lagoon. From the nature of this deeper stretch of water and the comparative clearing of undergrowth on the banks, Croft judged it to be partly the work of man's hand, not entirely the result of nature. But he forbore to suggest this to the girl.

Croft led the way back to the grove, then on to the clearing beyond.

Suddenly Barbara stood still, with a little cry.

"What's that?"

He stopped, looking aside in the direction indicated. Stooping swiftly, he lifted a queer bleached object and examined it closely. She drew near, glancing curiously at the hideous thing.

"It's a skull! Isn't it?"

"Yes," he replied, "and—of the negro type!"

She looked up, startled. Until then it had not occurred to her to wonder concerning the island. The past with its tragedy had expunged all else from her mind.

He continued to examine the skull, with puzzled brows.

"There are some curious holes which I cannot understand," he said. "They might have been caused by bullets. But it is doubtful if natives would possess bullets here."

"Do you think there are any here now—any natives?"

He met the eyes raised in trepidation to his own. "I can't tell, yet. But they are friendly enough to white people." Throwing away the skull, he went on toward the open space.

The apparent caves proved to be moss-covered ruins of bamboo huts. Many had fallen into rough heaps upon the ground; of others, bits of all remained standing, guarding like sentinels the broken portions resting wearily against their base. Lying about, half-hidden in undergrowth, were oddly shaped household utensils made of wood or rough kind of pottery; also large shells, rude cups fashioned from coconut shell, broken spears.

The scene was desolate, giving the impression of Death, of the relentless hand of Time sweeping away to extinction what once had seemed strong and full of life.

"It's quite possible," he said, "that the whole colony which lived here has died out. Populations dwindle very much in the Pacific islands."

She gave a little shudder.

"It's horrible here—I don't know why! Let's go down to the shore. There seems to be a hut standing down there." She pointed toward a small, sheltered structure half-way down the lower slope, sheltered beneath the hill which they had climbed. Croft hurried in its direction.

It consisted of one small room. The bamboo walls were intact, but the thatch forming the roof showed large rents; on the ground within, amid musty, dead leaves, were scattered utensils similar to those which they had already seen.

Croft glanced round critically, then at the girl, who had followed him, then out through the opening seaward.

"We can make this sufficiently habitable to carry on with," he observed.

His words went out into silence. They brought instantly a vivid realization of the immediate present to her mind, followed quickly by thoughts of the future. A new fear shot up, clutching her heart with a horrible, clammy hand. She looked with sudden dread at her companion's profile; and something about his tense lips seemed to confirm the awful foreboding. The faint color revived in her cheeks by exercise ebbed away, leaving her white. She clenched her teeth and her hands; then, with an effort, put her head to the test.

"We—shall soon be rescued? Ships are certain to—call here? It will only mean a few hours—or days?"

The moment which Croft had dreaded, yet known to be inevitable, was at hand; and he felt the utter inadequacy of his sex in dealing with delicate situations.

From his prolonged silence Barbara guessed the truth of his convictions; words were unnecessary. She clasped her hands in agony, uttering a little moaning cry like some dumb animal receiving its death-wound.

Croft turned quickly. He looked down at the quivering, girlish form, meeting the frightened eyes turned to him, trusting in his judgment and resource. And all at once he realized that, in this ghastly predicament, her very life lay in his hands. He leaned forward and took her clasped hands in both of his.

"Don't give up hope," he said earnestly. "It's very doubtful if ships call; but they may pass this way. We will do all we can."

She clung to his hands, breathing hard, seeming to find the old magnetism of his personality draw her up, deriving mental as well as physical support from his grip. Her eyes fixed upon his, as if searching for help. . . .

Suddenly, like a plucky ray of sunshine in a stormy sky, a faint smile flitted tremulously across her pale lips.

"We must—as you said—buck up," she whispered, the trembling words scarcely audible.

II

At mid-day the heat became excessive. Mercilessly the sun, like a quivering mass of molten steel, beat down upon the shore; no breath of wind stirred the hot air; the lagoon, with its almost indigo blue, assumed an oily, sluggish appearance, as if sinking to sleep with the lowering tide.

Within the shade of the angle formed by one side of the hut and the hill behind, Barbara lay inert upon a soft, if simple, couch of sun-dried coats. Finding that the ground swayed and rolled like a mountainous sea if she endeavored to rise, she gave up the attempt, and lay motionless, with closed eyes.

Nearby were some untouched bananas and a broken coconut, the shell of which was filled with water and placed upright between three stones. From within the hut came the noise of splashing sticks, as if somebody were breaking the bamboo canes which, crossed and interlaced, formed its structure.

The girl listened, wondering dully at the endurance of her companion, full of a miserable sense of shame at her own weakness. Without pausing for rest, after fetching her coats and procuring food, he had begun clearing and improving this dreary abode—carrying down broken portions from the ruins above for a door, fetching other canes and palm-leaves for mending the thatched roof.

Presently, hot and disheveled, he appeared. He had shed all his clothes except breeches and shirt, and looked, she thought, strangely in keeping with the scene around them. This was her first experience of a man whose life had been spent chiefly in wild surroundings, often upon but the fringe of civilization; whose abundant vitality responded to the call of untamed nature in a way that proved he had not been shackled by chains of convention closing around him, fetter by fetter, as the years passed.

"That's done!" he said briefly. He sat down and proceeded to peel and eat bananas with considerable relish.

"I feel so useless!" she exclaimed, miserably. "Such a hindrance instead of a help. It would have been wiser to have left me in the water. You would get on better alone. We shall only die lingering deaths here, if rescue doesn't come."

"Dashed if I mean to die!" he protested, between two large mouthfuls of fruit. "Nor shall you!"

Throwing away his banana-skins, he rose and surveyed the water; then he came close to her, towering over her, as it seemed to her excited fancy.

"I'm going to try to reach the machine. I may be able to rescue our luggage and provisions."

"Oh! no, no, no!" she cried wildly. "Suppose you get drowned? Never mind luggage! What does that matter? Oh! don't leave me all alone—"

Terrified, she tried to reach some part of him, to restrain him by force.

He caught her arms, raising her to her feet and supporting her.

"Listen!" he commanded in a tone which checked her agitation. "It's not only luggage! I want to save the wireless transmitting set—"

"Wireless!" Radiant relief overspread her face. "Why—then—we can soon get rescued after all? I forgot about that."

"You mustn't rely too much on it. It will be only the short range set. The long range used on board obtained its electrical energy from a generator run from one of the engines, and is therefore useless now."

Her eagerness for this new hope to be tested was still modified by fears concerning the risks of his venture. He pointed out the shallowness of the water and the scattered little coral islands. "The tide's low enough now for me to wade to that one nearest the reef. From there it's quite a short distance, if swimming is necessary."

"I will wade with you—"

"The devil you won't!" He suddenly wheeled round upon her. "Look here! You're never to go in the lagoon! Bathe in the river, but don't ever go in the lagoon. Swear to me!"

She gazed at him in stupefied amazement and anger.

"Why not? If—if you go in—"

"I—er—I understand these waters. They're treacherous. Promise me—"

"Oh!" she interrupted impatiently. "I don't want to bathe—ever—anywhere! I'll sit and watch you go."

"In this blazing sun? No, indeed! You must lie down in the hut and sleep."

"In this blazing sun? No, indeed! You must lie down in the hut and sleep."

Vainly she remonstrated, fearing a recurrence of the tangible loneliness she had experienced upon the hillside. His jaw set in a way she was to know well. With a viselike grip he drew her toward the hut.

The interior was cleared now of rubbish, and a rough aperture for window had been made at the end facing inland. The shade was cool and welcome. Croft fetched the coats and spread them upon the ground.

"Now," he said, "stay here until I return."

"You understand? You promise to remain? Or must I barricade the door?"

She pulled her hand away, and let her aching head fall back upon the fleecy lining of the coat.

"Oh, don't bully me!" she protested irritably, trying to control the quaver in her voice. "I won't endure it. Please—go."

He looked down at her in silence for a moment, his brows knit in perplexity. Then he turned and went out, setting up the improvised door behind him.

Lying motionless in the comparative gloom, a prey to rising fever, new fears assailed her. Shrinking in horror, she faced the fact of her isolation. Sundered from all the sure harbors of civilization with this man of uncertain moods—a man whom she neither liked nor understood! . . .

A care for her physical welfare had certainly been shown today. But in everything her will had been overpowered, even to the extent of physical force.

It was not to be borne! What might not happen? . . . The fears, accumulating, grew into feverish terror. She struggled to her feet, and hurried herself weakly at the door, with some frenzied idea of escape. . . .

The door was barricaded on the outside!

As a caged beast, half-mad with terror and impotence, she staggered up and down the little hut, her brow clammy, her clenched hands shaking. . . . With a rush of hysterical tears, she flung herself upon the ground. "Hugh! Hugh! Hughie!"

"The man intends to live. The girl is hysterical. Is he strong enough for both?"

Why have RHEUMATISM?

Oh, what a wonderful feeling to be free from that miserable rheumatism. To know again the joy of limber joints and active muscles—freedom from that agonizing pain!

How often have you longed for some relief as you suffered torture from swollen, inflamed muscles and joints—how often have you said you would give anything in the World for a few hours comfort!

But you didn't know that all you had to do to get real relief from this nerve wracking misery was just to build rich, red blood, did you? You didn't know that rheumatism had to be stopped from the inside by destroying the impurities that cause it—by building millions of red cells in your poor, weak blood, did you?

Until you fill your system full of healthy, rich, red blood you will never end your rheumatism. S. S. S. will surely help you. That's because S. S. S.

helps Nature build the red-blood-cells that fight off the impurities that cause rheumatism.

Conquer rheumatism! S. S. S. has shown the way. For generations S. S. S. has brought blessed relief and comfort to thousands of rheumatic sufferers.

When the rich, red blood that S. S. S. helps Nature build goes coursing through your system, it purifies the blood in your body. Rheumatism vanishes—skin blemishes disappear—you begin to get hungry again and enjoy your food—strength and power fill your body—you are vigorous—red-blooded and ready for action. Know this joy of living again! Take S. S. S. and banish rheumatism!

Get S. S. S. from any druggist. The larger bottle is more economical.

HOW TO SOLVE A CROSS-WORD PUZZLE

When the correct letters are placed in the white spaces this puzzle will spell words both vertically and horizontally. The first letter in each word is indicated by a number, which refers to the definition listed below the puzzle. Thus No. 1 under the column headed "horizontal" defines a word which will fill the white spaces up to the first black square to the right, and a number under "vertical" defines a word which will fill the white squares to the next black one below. No letters go in the black spaces. All words used are dictionary words, except proper names. Abbreviations, slang, initials, technical terms and obsolete forms are indicated in the definitions.
